At the beginning of the nineteenth century, certainty seemed possible. By its end, everything was in doubt. As philosophers, academics and scientists reinvented the way people in the West understood the world, artists first followed, then led the charge. Join Rory McClure in the Saint Louis Art Museum on Friday evenings as we discover the way artists responded to a century of optimism and doubt, as well as of hope and despair. Discover more about these masterpieces from the Romanticism to Impressionism collection at the Art Museum.
